Many defenses, however, are not considered to be defenses at law due to an interpretation of the law in favor of the defendant. A defendant may be able to recover their defense if the defense is not based on any fact. A defendant may be able to recover their defense if the defense is not based on any fact. A defendant may be able to recover their defense if the defense is not based on any fact.